In this inspiring and surprising memoir, Richard Clark tells the story of his unlikely journey from a comfortable life in the United States to a life of adventure and service around the world.

Clark was born into a wealthy family in New York City. He attended private schools and went on to earn a degree from Harvard University. After college, he worked as a successful investment banker.

But Clark was not content with his life. He felt like he was missing something. He wanted to make a difference in the world.

In 2001, Clark quit his job and sold all of his possessions. He bought a one-way ticket to Thailand and set off on a journey that would change his life forever.

Clark traveled to over 100 countries and worked with a variety of organizations, including the United Nations, the World Bank, and the Red Cross. He helped to build schools and hospitals, and he provided food and water to those in need.

Clark's journey was not without its challenges. He was arrested in several countries and he was even threatened with death. But he never gave up on his mission to help others.

In 2010, Clark founded his own non-profit organization, the An Unlikely Journey Foundation. The foundation provides financial support to schools and hospitals in developing countries.

Clark's story is an inspiration to us all. It shows us that anything is possible if we are willing to step outside of our comfort zones and follow our dreams.
