But what if the whole thing is a hoax? What if the real death rate from Covid is much lower than what we've been told?

That's the claim made by a new book by Dr. David Katz, a world-renowned expert on public health. In his book, Katz argues that the Covid mortality rate has been hyped hundredfold.

Katz bases his claim on a number of factors, including:

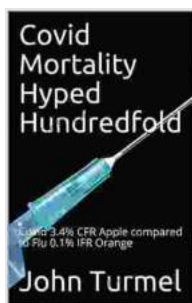

- The fact that the vast majority of people who die from Covid are elderly or have underlying health conditions.
- The fact that the death rate from Covid is much lower in countries with younger populations.
- The fact that the death rate from Covid has declined significantly since the early days of the pandemic.

Katz concludes that the real death rate from Covid is around 0.1%, not 10% as some have claimed.

If Katz is right, then the Covid pandemic is not nearly as deadly as we've been led to believe. This has significant implications for public health policy. For example, it means that we can afford to be much less restrictive in our approach to the virus.

Of course, Katz's claims are controversial. Some experts have accused him of downplaying the severity of the pandemic. However, his research is solid, and his s are supported by a growing body of evidence.

If you're interested in learning more about the real death rate from Covid, then I encourage you to read Katz's book. It's a fascinating and thought-provoking read that will challenge your assumptions about the pandemic.
