Killbuck Creek

A smaller tributary of the Muskingum River, Killbuck Creek offers a more intimate fishing experience. Surrounded by lush vegetation, Killbuck Creek is home to bluegill, crappie, and largemouth bass. Anglers can float the creek in kayaks or canoes, exploring hidden coves and casting their lines into the shallow waters.

White Eyes Creek

White Eyes Creek is a scenic stream that flows through the western part of Coshocton County. Known for its largemouth bass and bluegill, White Eyes Creek is a popular destination for anglers and boaters alike. The creek's slow-moving waters and ample vegetation provide excellent cover for fish.

Spring Fishing

As the water temperatures rise in the spring, fish become more active and feed aggressively. This is an ideal time to target smallmouth bass and walleye in the deeper pools and runs of the Muskingum River. Anglers can use live bait, such as minnows or nightcrawlers, or cast spinnerbaits and crankbaits to attract fish.

Summer Fishing

During the hot summer months, fish seek cooler water and often congregate in shaded areas under bridges or near vegetation. Anglers can use topwater lures, such as poppers or buzzbaits, to entice bass and bluegill near the surface. For walleye and catfish, bottom-fishing techniques with live bait or jigs are effective.

Fall Fishing

As the days get shorter and the water temperatures cool in the fall, fish begin to feed heavily in preparation for winter. This is a prime time to target largemouth bass and catfish in the shallow waters of Killbuck Creek and White Eyes Creek. Anglers can use crankbaits, spinnerbaits, or live bait to catch these hungry fish.

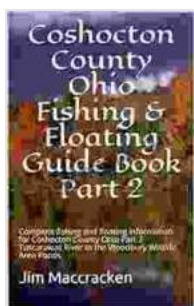

Winter Fishing

Although fishing slows down in the winter, it is still possible to catch fish in the deeper holes and pools of the Muskingum River and Walhonding River. Anglers can use jigs tipped with live bait or small spoons to target walleye and catfish through the ice.

In addition to fishing, Coshocton County's waterways offer excellent opportunities for boating and kayaking. Anglers can launch their boats at public access points along the Muskingum River, Walhonding River, and Killbuck Creek. Kayakers and canoeists can explore the smaller streams and tributaries, such as White Eyes Creek, for a more secluded and intimate experience.
