The Second Punic War

The Second Punic War was a conflict between the Roman Republic and Carthage that lasted from 218 to 201 BC. It was the second of three Punic Wars, and it is considered one of the most important wars in ancient history.

The war began when Hannibal, a Carthaginian general, invaded Italy with a large army. Hannibal won a series of early victories, including the famous Battle of Cannae, where he annihilated a Roman army twice the size of his own. However, the Romans eventually rallied and defeated Hannibal at the Battle of Zama in 202 BC.

Hannibal

Hannibal was one of the greatest military commanders of all time. He was born in Carthage in 247 BC, and he grew up to be a brilliant strategist and tactician. Hannibal was also a skilled diplomat, and he was able to form alliances with a number of powerful tribes in Italy.

Hannibal's invasion of Italy was one of the most daring military campaigns in history. He crossed the Alps with a large army, and he won a series of early victories against the Romans. However, the Romans eventually rallied and defeated Hannibal at the Battle of Zama in 202 BC.
